MONDAYJuly 3, 1876. NEW YORK FASHIONS FOR JULY. [From Our Own Correspondent.] Not that I have any disposition to rail against society; it has its uses, and one of them is the influence semetimes upconsciously exerted in favor of good things. The fashionable young men of New York have done a manly thing, in a manly way; they have shown respect for work and workers, and when the regular stage drivers and back drivers showed their good-natured consider. ation by yielding the road, or getting out of the way, the amateurs responded by invit-ing them to a dinner, at which a little, not too much speechifying, cemented the good-will between them. This was good. Now, the belies are doing better work than they imagined by adapting their dress to its pur-pose, by wearing lines and cotton fede dresses, which are as much prettier and more be-wit hing than slig for races and boating, and lawn and garden parties and croquet, as May is sweeter than November. When Anelina places one pretty foot upon the steps in her descent from Mr. Montmorency Knick erbocker's coach, her pretty gray stripe, with dark blue costume fluttering in the gentle wind, soft lace floating about her, and the low droop, shaded by a plume, of her Gains-borough hat touching her shoulder, she has no idea that she is preschive the no idea that she is preaching the gospel of cetton to Rachel and Penelope, Hattie and Jemima; but she is. When a lovely and aristocratic young bride puts on a white antique linen, of the purest ivory tint, and shades her fair face with a tives, but she accomplishes a useful, human work nevertheless, for she has taken com-mon things and imparted to them the beauty and fragrance of her own person and has belped to teach a great truth, that nothing is poor or common in itself, it only becomes so by the company in which we keep it-the use to which we put it. I stog the praises of cotton, that is, I would if I could, and I thank art and skill and industry for making that which is within the reach of every one, so good in texture and design that those who cannot afford silk are no longer to be pitied. The curious American passion for silk is a remnant of our early days of poverty and privation, when women did their own work, went out very rarely, and then in all the dignity of best black silk and real lace. As time went on, and occasions for going out multiplied, they still clung to the idea that they must always wear slik, and thus it happens that with many women, of late years, silk has become the only wear; and if they can only get one new dress, instead of having that a useful one, adapted to diversified occasions, they still cling to silk, and trail it about in utter unconsciousness that it only expresses either their ignorance or their poverty. The white antique or damasked linens of the present season are lovely, they have a smooth satin surface, arabesquered in jacquard patterns. One could take a fine old tablecioth, dip it in a could take a fine old tablecioth, dip it in a solution of coffee, (if it had been kept white) and make of it a fashionable overdress. Then there are grey twilled cotton which look like serge, and are stylishly trimmed with grey linen lace and red ribbons, or pleatings in which red or dark blue is introduced, the bows of ribbon with the costume is profusely ornamented, corresponding in color. There ornamented, corresponding in color. There are also grey and cream-colored laces into which poppy red or dark blue is introduced in minute proportions, but with a striking effect, which the addition of silk or ribbon bows of the same shade greatly heightens. There is no medium in color this season. Everything is very dark, very light or neutral. There are no bright blues, apple greens or English pinks, only the red of the poppy, or the deeper tint of Burgundy wine, the brown of the butternut, and darkest, deepest blue; contrasts with light Very new and very pretty dresses are of grey or unbleached linen, embroidered in the same shade with linen also, but with dots or linen introduced, of colored wool, dark red or blue, and this deep color is united with grey in the ribbon, which forms the gar-started a school for the purpose of teaching young ladies in society how to do their own dressmaking in correct, and even scientific principles. A skillful modiste is engaged to give two lessons per week of one hour each to the class, who practice at home between times, and many of them show a genius for the work, which will shortly make them ex-pert. Why cannot several such schools be established for the benefit of fashionable young ladies in this country? It would be more rapid, and to many of them more in-teresting work than drawing, or painting, or wood carving, or lace making. Why cannot we have schools of dressmaking as well as schools of cookery? One is as useful as the other, while the money saved in families would be a consideration. American girls need something to do; that is conceded, and how many make poor singers and dreadful readers, and unappreciated writers who would make excellent dressmakers. Besides, there is no reed to inform the world of their mission. They can put their taste and skill to real practical use, and no one be the wiser. They can save the ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty dollars they pay for having a dress made, and get a second one, or put the money in the mark form.

American girls are pretty, but as a rule they are the most utterly useless of human beings. They toil not, neither do they spin, yet Selomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. It may well be a serious question to any man whether he can afford to marry one of them. They can neither help him nor themselves; they expect all the good things of this world to fall into their cans, without even reaching on their theories.

caps, without even reaching out their hands would be a very good thing; that is, a scheme under which it was opened. One of the truest charities and philanthropies would be such a school superintended by some lady in high position, who would attract young women to it and take as much trouble for it as for a

"rosebud" dinner party.
FASHIONS IN COUNTRY HOUSES. As the centennial keeps more of our peoguests; that the house linen is of perfect fine-ness, and neatness and purity; that the rooms are sweet and clean, and thoroughly prepared for comfort and convenience. In good country houses not only are small writing tables and chairs considered essen-tial to the furnishing of guest chambers, but the implements for writing, with various sizes of note, letter paper and envelopes are supplied; and these, of course, must be directly the care of the lady chatelaine her-self.

Ladies can, and seemingly do, dress as they please. At least among the highest and most refined people there is no effort to follow fashion. There is fineness, and softness, and grace, and artistic effect, but there are few of these algebrate. few of those elaborate costumes which represent the latest fashion plates. All kinds of white toilettes are in order, while negliges for morning, white over a color, or a tint for dinner, white prettily draped with riobons, and trimmed with lace for the evening. A white lawn, trimmed with pleated ruffles, and with a fichu tied at the back, chiy needs a shade hat to complete a morning tollette, in which one can waik, ride or secompany the lady hostess in her rounds. Young lady daughters sometimes put over these white morning dresses an ample apron of gingham, long sleeves of the same, gathered in bands and pinned to the shoulder, and thus without solling their drapery, assist in the fine dusting, the arrangement of parlors, the distribution of flowers and the like tasks admirably suited to their lastes and connects. tastes and capacity.

The colored embroidery so fashionable abroad, is not much used here, excepting in rich hand work done in siis, and used for the trimming of handsome dinner and evening dresses of ivery faille. Pretty white embroidered manaline are worm for morning embroidered muslins are worn for morning walks in park or garden, but the embroidery is nominally white, and the trimming Vallencinnes lace and colored ribbons. If the garden and croquet parties.

The Princesse dress is always a favorite with women of refined taste. It is cut high, and loose, round and square necked. Sometimes close, sometimes open. For morning wear it is cut high in soft nauseek, the seams outlined with narrow thread tosertion, a mere heading. Round the neck is a little fichu of lace or crepe de chine, down the front oramental bows. A belt or girdie holds the chatelaine, from which the fau is suspended. A low princesse dress may be of soft ivory silk, puffed and alternated with lace insertion, of gauze, of crepe de chien, or of a very fine all wool berage, which mould into the figure charmingly, and is especially youth-ful, and therefore adapted to young, and young married ladies. Either and all of these materials are slightly fulled and draped over silk, and trimmed with bows of black vel-vet and roses, or ribbon loops, with marrabout or tasseled fringes, with deep netted beading for border. Pretty greys appear sometimes in diaphemous materials, relieved with a dash of flaming color, and there are lovely cinnamon shades, over which white lace or thin muslin has an exquisite effect, particularly if small bouquets of white and red daises or roses, enter into the part in the dressing, and emergencies, in which the feet are likely to be more visible than in the ordinary and orderly routine of city life. Fine over worked hoslery have come into use again, and are as captivating ly silk. But there are ladies who consider thread hose, even though fine as the famous gloves made from a spider's web, as "harsh," and declare they cannot endure it; for those tinted silk is the only wear, displayed to advantage by the new sandalled slippers, which are replacing the French reception shoes, strapped across the front, and the Oxford ties, which latter ought only to be worn by ladies who wear "ones and a half." JEWELS AND ORNAMENTS.

It has become increasingly the fashion of late years to adapt the ornaments to the cos-tume and to discard mere gold jewelry. The heavy linked necklaces, with yellow gold pendants, and massive band bracelets, which are displayed in shop windows, are never seen upon the person of an elegante. They are only displayed upon the outside of a walking suit a walking suit, upon the promenate, or at the theater by persons to which their cost was of great importance, and who having once become their possessors, hang them out as an evidence of their claim to distinction upon every possible occasion. Bracelets have ceased to be fashionable since form became a study in dress, and no woman of fine taste with a well moulded arm would now think spotling it with bracelets. Ten and twelve buttoned gloves of the finest and softest kid. which fit like another and more velvely skin, is the great desideratum. A new extravagance abroad is the introduction of solid gold embroidery, and a specimen dress has been sent to the Centennial exhibition from Paris which is said to be worth forty thousand dollars. It is simply a rich white satin dress, with a very long train, hand embroidered in gold, and its appearance would hardly be likely to tempt any one to commit the folly of purchasing it at that figure, or contemplate solid gold with a yearning to see it projuced in an embroidery pattern. Still it may have the effect to create a demand for fine gold ornamentation to a limited extent, and revive the drooping trade in gold jewelry. Fine gold buttons are among the noveltles for the fastening of dresses, and these are very pretty and very effective, especially upon prune, black, navy blue and invisible green. Nothing can be in better taste than a handsome falls in either of these executes. a handsome faille in either of these shades, trimmed with feather trimming to match, and fastened down the length of the long cuirasse basque with small buttons of fine gold. As was remarked, however, the ten-dency is towards ornaments to match the tollette, or towards eccentric ornaments.

We have now complete sets of jewels, including necklace and earrings, in exquisite point lace, in many different patterns, and a tollette is recently mentioned, the earrings accompanying which were composed of black ribbon velvet, embroidered with rubles and edged with a ruby fringe. Earrings made of Barrow ribbon, either velvet or watered slik, are quite one of the fashions of the day. The ribbon, which is double, is fastened with a small buckle of either pearls or diamonds, and fringed to correspond, and for day wear the ribbon is ornamented with either steel or Shell and silver still hold a prominent place, particularly the fine Genoese silver fliagree jewelry, of which there are some exquisite specimens at the exposition. But the latest craze is for ornaments in certain foreign woods. Chinese and Japan woods, the Jerusalem Olive, and the like. These ornaments come in the form of

sleeve buttons, rosaries with crosses at-tached, and necklaces, and are marked with eastern characters. But if the demand continnes we may expect to see wooden chate-laines, bracelets and whatever else fancy may suggest, but with only so much of Jerusa-lem or Japan about them as varnish and a little clever spatter work can impart. ple at home so it also occasions more visitlog in country houses, more hospitality of that extended, and ample proportion which is common in England but of which less is practised in this country partly because we have fewer fine country homes, partly because American ladies do not like the constant supervision, and real work which it occasions. For the owner and proprietor of an estate in this country rarely devotes much of his time to it, he is engrossed in business or politics or the arduous duties of a profession, and it is his wife who must attend to the details of the out doors, as well as indoor, to the minutia of the farm, and the garden, the greenhouse, and the grapery. as well as supervise the domestic routine of the manage. Nor are the interior duties by any means slight. In order to entertain a numerous circle of friends and business acnumerous circle of friends and business acquaintances, she must keep a set of books with as much regularity as the paid employes of a business house. She must send out invitations by every mail, she must receive replies. She must check off those people who have been disposed of. She must note changes in dates, and provide for the filling up of those that are vacated by inability to accept. She must arrange plans for the pleasure of her guests and to suit different tastes. She must remember personal likes, and dislikes, particularly in regard to food. She must consult the gardener in regard to fruits, flowers and vegetables. She must give the daily orders to the butcher, she must be able, upon a pinch, to make the pies or puddings. She to the butcher, she must be able, upon a pinch, to make the pies or puddings. Thus it will be seen that a country house is no sinecure, and that there are other ways of earning one's daily bread besides sewing and washing dishes. Besides, it must be remembered that little credit is given for all this. It is not put down as work. If a man supervises a great establishment by which money is made, it is work; but if a woman supervises a great establishment in which money is spent, it is not work, though the real labor performed in one case may be greater than in the other. But perfection in the one case is to have the work done with as much noise and fuss as possible; in the other, so smoothly that the wheels are not visible, the whole machinery seeming to move by its own volition.
